

Rocaille Roberts, MPH

Rocaille Roberts is the Director of the Office of Policy and Planning at Harris County Public Health (HCPH). She is responsible for facilitating and managing comprehensive community health improvement planning initiatives; providing oversight and/or coordination support for health assessment, strategic planning, outcomes evaluation and public health accreditation activities; and serves as the health department's liaison for legislative and regulatory developments for priority public health issues outlined in the HCPH Strategic Plan 2013-2018.

Ms. Roberts currently serves as Project Director for Healthy Living Matters, which is a Houston/Harris County planning initiative charged with the task of developing policy strategies aimed at system-level and environmental change to reduce childhood obesity in the area. With the support of community stakeholders from various health and non-health sectors, she has oversight over multiple assessments, community and stakeholder engagement, policy scan and tracking activities and evaluation.

Ms. Roberts currently serves on the Texas Medical Center's Government Affairs Advisory Council, the Houston/Harris County Community Transformation Leadership Team, the Texas Health-in-All-Policies Advisory Panel, and the National Association of Local Health Officials' (NACCHO) Healthy Living and Prevention Workgroup. She is also a part of NACCHO's Quality Improvement Leaders team. Ms. Roberts received an MPH degree in health services management and policy from the Ohio State University in 2001. She is currently a Ph.D candidate studying health economics and health services research at the University of Texas School of Public Health.
